"Search and Seizure" explores the evolution of the U.S. Supreme Court's Fourth Amendment jurisprudence. The course, open to undergraduate and law students, develops the skills necessary to understand, evaluate, and develop legal arguments. Through the study of the government's use of surveillance tactics over the decades, students will learn to evaluate legal arguments for and against limiting government searches and seizures of people and their property. Materials will include landmark Supreme Court decisions as well as journalistic and video essays and articles that place those decisions in historical context. Grades will be based on a series of approximately three 300-to-500-word essays and a final examination.
