mll.as.miami.edu

- Dept. Codes: ARB, CHI, FRE, GER, HAI, HEB, ITA, JPN, MLL, POR, SPA

Degree Programs

The Ph.D. in Literary, Cultural, and Linguistic Studies (French, Portuguese, or Spanish) offers major concentrations in Literary and Cultural Studies and Critical Studies of Language/Linguistics. The program is designed primarily to prepare students for careers as university professors and research scholars. Students develop advanced language, teaching, and research skills that lend themselves to other professions, as well. A variety of geographic, temporal, and theoretical concentrations allow students to carry out innovative and interdisciplinary research projects, often with a transnational focus.

Students develop superior language skills and professional competency in their major research field(s) through an intensive study of canonical works while engaging in comparative, interdisciplinary fields such as Africana Studies, Arabic Studies, Caribbean Studies, French and Francophone Studies, Iberian Studies, Italian Studies, Latin American Studies, Luso-Brazilian Studies, and combinations thereof.

The program's strong theoretical component grounds student research in a range of areas, including: aesthetics, bilingualism, digital humanities, early modern studies, film studies, gender and sexuality studies, (im)migration studies, indigenous studies, performance studies, postcolonial studies, queer studies, subaltern studies, sociolinguistics, theatre studies, and women's studies.

Students are required to develop competency in a cognate field related to their intellectual pursuits, leading to the dissertation topic. Recent examples of cognate specialization include anthropology, communication studies, film studies, history, law, philosophy, musicology, classics, and sociology.

The department offers these graduate certificates and concentrations to prepare students beyond their specialization, which may be fulfilled with course electives:

- Graduate Certificate in Second Language Acquisition and Teaching (<https://mll.as.miami.edu/graduate/slat-certificate/>)
- Graduate Certificate in Digital Humanities (<https://mll.as.miami.edu/graduate/digital-humanities-certificate/>)
- Medieval and Early Modern Studies Concentration (<https://mll.as.miami.edu/graduate/medieval-and-early-modern-studies-concentration/>), an interdisciplinary certificate offered in conjunction with English and History
- Caribbean Studies Concentration (<https://mll.as.miami.edu/graduate/caribbean-studies-concentration/>), interdisciplinary doctoral concentration in Caribbean Studies in conjunction with English and History

The Department of Modern Languages and Literatures accepts applications to the Ph.D. program for Fall admission only from students holding (or completing during the time of application) B.A. or M.A. degrees in a related discipline (e.g. Spanish, French, Luso-Brazilian Studies, History, Anthropology, Communication Studies, Comparative Literature, Philosophy, Journalism). The Department does not admit students who seek terminal M.A. degrees.

The deadlines to apply for the 2025-26 academic year are the following:

- PRIORITY Admission and Fellowship Consideration Deadline: January 3, 2025
- REGULAR Application (will not be considered for Fellowships) Deadline: February 17, 2025

The Graduate Committee will begin reviewing complete applications January 6, 2025. All applicants will automatically be considered for Departmental Teaching Assistantships, but only priority deadline applicants will be considered also for university-wide fellowships.
