

D.M.A. IN VOCAL PERFORMANCE AND PEDAGOGY

Overview

The Doctor of Musical Arts in Vocal Performance and Pedagogy prepares the experienced singer who has a solid record of performance in operatic, concert, and recitals for a successful career as a teacher of voice. It is the perfect degree for a voice teacher who wants to strengthen teaching, performance, and research skills. By combining the traditional pedagogical traditions with the latest research and innovation, our graduates are excellently prepared to win employment and further their careers as teachers and performers. The Frost School of Music Department of Vocal Performance is uniquely positioned to prepare doctoral students for the world of vocal pedagogy, vocal performance, and scholarly research. We are part of a large school of music that is innovative and embracing of both traditional and contemporary vocal arts. The department faculty has expertise with traditional operatic performance (Metropolitan Opera, Covent Garden, Chicago Lyric, San Francisco, Berlin, Zurich, La Scala, etc.), avant-garde performance (BAM, NYC Symphony Space, etc.) and early music. The faculty is recognized as world-class pedagogues and has a history of successful teaching, resulting in students that enjoy careers in the world of vocal performance. In addition, opportunities to work with the faculty in other Frost School departments and programs, such as jazz, musical theater, and contemporary/pop, afford students a wide variety of pedagogical experiences that uniquely prepare them for employment. The degree is tailored for each student to build on strengths while addressing areas that need improvement. Students participate in doctoral course work that prepares them to move into a career as a performer-teacher in the field of vocal pedagogy and performance. Courses prepare the student as teacher, stage director, and administrator of faculties in schools, colleges, and universities. The course work helps students build practical and extensive knowledge of repertoire for teaching, including English, French, German, Italian and Musical Theater. Additionally, the curriculum affords performance opportunities in opera and recital, arranges internships with master teachers in voice studios and speech pathologists and otolaryngologists' practices. Furthermore, the option of incorporating a cognate allows students acquire expertise in a related area, thus preparing them to successfully move forward in their careers.
