Mission

To teach to students to identify the principles of human behavior and action, understand their cultural production and significance, and compare our own behaviors with those of people from other times and places around the world. The latter demands evolutionary, cross-cultural studies of human behavior.

Goals

Students who major or minor in anthropology at the University of Miami will:

- Successfully complete all courses required of Anthropology majors
- Demonstrate understanding of key methods and concepts of the discipline's four sub-fields—biological anthropology, socio-cultural anthropology, linguistic anthropology, and archaeology
- Describe in depth the developments in research in at least one of the four subfields
- Receive a foundation in critical thinking and key disciplinary ideas so that they may continue their studies in doctoral, medical, or professional programs (i.e., law school, business school) or find employment in pertinent fields after graduation.

Student Learning Outcomes

- Students will demonstrate in-depth knowledge of concepts that unify the sub-fields, or what anthropologists study and why they do so.
- Students will demonstrate knowledge of research developments in at least one of the four subfields—biological anthropology, socio-cultural anthropology, linguistic anthropology, and archaeology. To this end, they will understand how contemporary anthropologists gain information and what they learn from data collected.
- Students will receive a foundation in critical thinking skills.
