Introduction
The English Department offers programs for students interested in a liberal arts education. While many English majors direct their studies toward careers in law, creative writing, secondary education, or university teaching and scholarship, a major in English is just as valuable to students considering careers in business, journalism, or any of the health professions. Students who would like to learn more about any of these programs are encouraged to consult the Director of Undergraduate Studies in the Department of English, Ashe Bldg. 321.

Educational Objectives
English as a discipline offers an opportunity for a general humanistic education, and it develops skills in communication and analysis essential in most careers. An education in English teaches students to write, to think critically, to weigh values, and to communicate ideas. At the same time, it develops their creativity and aesthetic understanding, and affords them a knowledge of our literary heritage in all of its historical and cultural dimensions.

Degree Programs
The major in English leads to the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Advanced Writing and Communication Proficiency
All English courses (other than ENG 106) are designated writing courses (WRIT credit). A student majoring in English will complete the advanced writing and communication requirement of the College of Arts and Sciences (which requires four writing classes, including at least one in one of the student's major disciplines).

Major in English
Students majoring in English must earn 30 credit hours in English courses (36 credit hours for Departmental Honors) and fulfill the requirements of the track of their choice.

Credit hours earned for ENG 106 may not be applied toward the total number of credit hours required for the major. In each English course, the English major must earn a grade of C- or better, with an overall GPA in the major of 2.0 or better.

Students pursuing both a major and a minor (or two majors) offered by the Department of English may double-count a maximum of two English courses toward the fulfillment of their degree requirements. They must also have an additional major or minor in a department other than English.

Minor
The Department of English offers two minors:

- The Minor in English (http://bulletin.miami.edu/undergraduate-academic-programs/arts-sciences/english/english-minor/)
- The Minor in Creative Writing (http://bulletin.miami.edu/undergraduate-academic-programs/arts-sciences/english/creative-writing-minor/)

Students pursuing both a major and a minor (or two majors) offered by the Department of English may double-count a maximum of two English courses toward the fulfillment of their degree requirements. They must also have an additional major or minor in a department other than English.

Departmental Honors in Literature
Students interested in seeking Departmental Honors in Literature should consult the Director of Undergraduate Studies in English, normally before the end of the junior year.

To enter the program a student must have achieved by the end of the junior year at least a 3.5 GPA in English courses and a 3.3 GPA overall. In addition to fulfilling the requirements for the Major in English (with a concentration in Literature), the candidate for Departmental Honors must:

1. Take at least three literature courses numbered 400 or above.
2. Complete a six-credit-hour Senior Thesis. This thesis is a documented essay of about 10,000 words on a literary subject. The student undertaking a Senior Thesis normally registers in ENG 497 for the first semester of the project, and in ENG 498 for the second semester. The student must receive a grade of B or higher in both courses in order to qualify for honors. (6 credit hours)
3. While taking ENG 497 and ENG 498, participate in any workshops offered by the English Department for students engaged in independent research projects.
4. Receive for the thesis a recommendation for honors by the director of the Senior Thesis and by one other faculty reader from the Department of English.

5. Achieve an average in the major of at least 3.5, and an overall average of at least 3.3.

Total: 36 credit hours

Departmental Honors in Creative Writing

Students interested in seeking Departmental Honors in Creative Writing should consult the Director of Creative Writing, normally before the end of the junior year.

To enter the program a student must have achieved by the end of the junior year at least a 3.5 GPA in English courses (including courses in creative writing) and a 3.3 GPA overall. In addition to meeting the requirements for the Creative Writing Concentration, the candidate for Departmental Honors must:

1. Take at least three literature courses numbered 400 or above.
2. Complete a six-credit-hour Senior Creative Writing Project. The student undertaking this project normally registers in ENG 497 for the first semester of the project, and in ENG 498 for the second semester. The student must receive a grade of B or higher in both courses in order to qualify for honors. (6 credit hours)
3. Receive for the project a recommendation for honors by the director of the Senior Creative Writing Project and by one other faculty reader designated by the Director of Creative Writing.
4. Achieve an average in the major of at least 3.5, and an overall average of at least 3.3.

Total: 36 credit hours

ENG 106. Writing About Literature and Culture. 3 Credit Hours.
Advanced approaches to academic written communication using topics in literature and culture. Develops abilities in textual analysis and academic argument and enhances skills in research with primary and secondary sources. Cannot be taken on credit-only option. Prerequisite: WRS 105; or ACT English score 32 or above; or SAT Evidence-Based Reading and Writing or Critical Reading score 700 or above; or Foote Fellow designation.

ENG 221. Introduction to Fiction. 3 Credit Hours.
Forms of prose fiction and the analysis of representative short stories and novels.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

ENG 240. Literature and Medicine. 3 Credit Hours.
Patients, doctors, and disease itself offer writers avenues to explore ultimate questions. In this course we will examine medicine—and these ultimate questions—as represented in fiction, drama, poetry, and non-fiction. We will consider the works in terms of both the implications for medicine and the literary uses to which medicine can be put.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

ENG 241. Art of the Con: Con Artists, Tricksters, and Card Sharks in U.S. Literature and Culture. 3 Credit Hours.
Students will read novels, examine archival materials, review graphic novels, and watch films and TV shows about con artists and tricksters in American culture. In addition to writing essays, this course will provide students with the opportunity to learn how to annotate films in multimedia formats. Students will also learn about actual confidence games and frauds that rely upon narrative structures.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.
ENG 242. Literature and Law. 3 Credit Hours.
In this course we will study literary works, from a number of different historical periods, that focus on law and legal systems as a major theme. We will examine the ways in which authors represent the nature of law, the actual workings of law, and the relationship between law and ideals of justice. We will also consider other intersections between literature and law, such as legal efforts to censor literary works on political or moral grounds, and the connection between legal and literary interpretation. Authors to be studied will include writers such as Sophocles, Plato, Shakespeare, Balzac, Melville, Kafka, and Ginsberg.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

ENG 243. Contemporary American Migrations. 3 Credit Hours.
What does it mean to say America is a nation of immigrants? As a literary form, the American immigrant narrative describes the process of migration, Americanization and (un)settlement. How do authors portray immigrant experiences? Which stories are privileged and which silenced? Centering Miami and the state of Florida, this course will read and watch narratives of American immigration, attending to how race, gender, class and sexuality as well as the changing character and policies of place have shaped immigrant experiences. In addition, we will explore the following questions: Is ethnicity in opposition to Americanness? How is identity transformed by migration? How and why is home remembered? Finally, what are the constitutive tropes of American immigrant fiction, and what narrative strategies are deployed to tell these stories?

ENG 244. Contemporary Disaster Fiction. 3 Credit Hours.
It seems we are confronted almost daily with some new disaster. From natural disasters spurred on by climate change to global pandemics, from war and genocide to never-ending recessions, poverty, and racism – living in the twenty-first century means living with the effects of daily catastrophe. While the outlines of these disasters as they are reported in the media and represented by Hollywood are predictable, the explorations of disaster in literature are less familiar. This course will explore how contemporary literature imagines catastrophe, focusing on the social, political, and historical contexts of disaster fiction. How does contemporary literature question, rewrite, or challenge what a disaster means? How does it encourage us to think about disaster differently, and, most importantly, to change our responses to it?

Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

ENG 246. The Harlem Renaissance and Its Afterparties. 3 Credit Hours.
In order to fully appreciate the interdisciplinary nature of the Harlem Renaissance, we will grapple with music and visual culture as well as literary texts. In other words, this is a multimedia course! Students will be asked to consider the ways in which film, music, dance, and literature conceptualize race in America. Together, we will use these various modes of artistic production to question the distinctions between spontaneity and performance, between music and literature, and between the Black arts of the present and the Black arts of the past. Students will be responsible for two 4-6 page close readings, reading quizzes, and a final project entitled Afterparties of the Harlem Renaissance in which they will connect the work of a Harlem Renaissance artist with the work of a contemporary artist.

Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

ENG 247. Afrofuturism. 3 Credit Hours.
The massive success of the film Black Panther and Janelle Monae’s album Dirty Computer suggests that African American artists are providing broadly resonant solutions to our most urgent political concerns, constructing alternative models of liberation and self-governance through art. These works are often described as Afrofuturist, an outlook that blends science fiction tropes like space exploration, post-apocalyptic landscapes, and technological advancement with Afrocentric themes and aesthetics. In this course, we will turn a critical eye on contemporary works by Afrofuturist thinkers like Sun Ra, Nnedi Okorafor, and Octavia Butler. Through a variety of different mediums (political theory, literature, film, music, and visual culture), we will seek to answer why so many Black thinkers have turned to speculative and science fiction to imagine social and political change. This is a reading and writing intensive class. In some weeks, students are expected to read entire novels, so make sure to get a head start on reading-heavy weeks. By studying films and music released within the past several years alongside works of literature, it is my hope that students will turn the same critical lens that they use on literature to the media they consume every day.

ENG 248. Curiosity: Vice and Virtue in Science and Literature. 3 Credit Hours.
Though we now recognize curiosity as a mostly positive character trait, most western Europeans from antiquity through the middle ages considered curiosity a dangerous vice. This perspective has lived on in sayings like curiosity killed the cat, in stories about both mad scientists and nosy children, and in our society's frequent anxieties about the unknown effects of new technologies, like cloning. What happened to bring about such a dramatic change in how curiosity was valued? What might make this desire to know either good or evil, hopeful or dangerous? To explore this question, this seminar will direct our own curiosity to a range of examples from both science and literature about characters who display exceptional curiosity, along with the consequences brought about by their desire to know. We will explore the lives of historical scientists alongside literature's myriad stories of men and women who knew too much, from Adam and Eve to Alice in Wonderland, from Doctor Faustus to Doctor Frankenstein and Sherlock Holmes. We will examine theological arguments that depicted curiosity as a vice; the biblical account of the Fall; stories of mad scientists; fairy tales; and depictions of detectives and spies on television and film. Together, we will think carefully about what might have seemed dangerous about knowledge in the past, and what might remain dangerous about it (and our own pursuits in the classroom) today.

ENG 249. Literature and the Environment. 3 Credit Hours.
This class will explore a wide range of literary responses to the natural world, from the late eighteenth century to the present moment, from Britain, the United States, the Caribbean, West Africa, and other global environments. We will read poetry, fiction, and creative nonfiction to analyze the diverse ways in which writers have represented the natural world and people's place within it—and against it. Can environmental storytelling provide useful solutions to environmental crisis? What is “cli-fi”? How have queer, Indigenous, and Black writers revised the canon of “nature writing” that tended to emphasize the figure of the white man alone in the woods, seeking inspiration from nature.

ENG 308. Arts and Humanities in Professional and Public Life. 3 Credit Hours.
What is the role of the arts and humanities in the university and in public life in the contemporary United States? How do the skills you are acquiring as an English literature or Creative Writing student translate to the world beyond the UM campus? In this class, you will read and analyze literary and journalistic texts that represent the academy in all its complexity, and you will write creative work in response to the question “Why English?” At the same time, you will get practical guidance on the transition from undergraduate student to the world of employment, professional school, and/or graduate school, including workshops and presentations from UM English alumni who have gone on to graduate school in English and Creative Writing, to law school, to medical school, and to successful careers in many fields. As a class we will carry out research and present our findings into the current state of arts and humanities higher education and the relationship between university classrooms and the wider world of public humanities in publishing, journalism, social media, and the public sphere more broadly.

ENG 318. Science, Medicine, and Magic in Early Modern Literature. 3 Credit Hours.
British historian Herbert Butterfield has argued that the emergence of modern science between 1450 and 1700 "outshines everything since the rise of Christianity and reduces the Renaissance and Reformation to the rank of mere episodes, mere internal displacements within the system of medieval Christendom" (The Origins of Modern Science). This course seeks to investigate some of the ways in which this momentous shift informs early modern literature, and looks at some of the ways in which literary and rhetorical practices shape the presentation of science. Our aim is to understand what is frequently called "the Scientific Revolution" in the context of other forms of belief, such as religion and magic, and transformations in Renaissance society at large. What was "revolutionary" about early modern innovations in the sciences? How did the sciences become a central aspect of public life? How can we define the correlation—intellectual, cultural, and social—between "magical" forms of thinking and "modern science"? How might we gain a more comprehensive understanding of the historical situation that produced witches, witchcraft, and the occult sciences? Studying works by Burton, Drayton, Donne, Erasmus, Galileo, Herrick, Milton, Nashe, and Shakespeare, as well as medical illustrations and anatomical drawings by da Vinci, Michelangelo, and Vesalius, we explore literary representations of replacement of Ptolemy's geocentric cosmology with Copernicus's heliocentric system; the invention and first use of gunpowder and related technology; the management and treatment of bubonic plague, leprosy, syphilis, and melancholia; revenge and retaliation in the form of poisoning and torture; alchemical solutions and herbal healing, as well as various supernatural manifestations—pacts with demons, accusations and persecutions of witches, hauntings by ghosts and apparitions.

ENG 344. Data and Contemporary Culture. 3 Credit Hours.
Data is often considered the domain of scientists and statisticians. But the proliferation of data and databases across nearly all aspects of daily life – powering everything from the targeted advertisements you see when you go online to the fake news circulating on Facebook to the next financial recession – has made the study and understanding of the concept of data a vital everyday concern. This course provides an introduction to the meaning, uses, and politics of data today. Readings are drawn from literary and cultural studies, media studies, science and technology studies, sociology, information science, and the digital humanities. No prior technical experience is required.

Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

ENG 346. Black Girl Magic. 3 Credit Hours.
People have long thought that Black girls were magic, sometimes literally. From Nina Simone's unofficial title as the high priestess of soul, to the theatrical machinations of female practitioners of black magic in popular Hollywood films like Pirates of the Caribbean, the figure of the voodoo priestess haunts representations of Black women. In this class we will explore both the stereotypes and the reality of the intersection between gender and African-based religions. From the magical practices of hoodoo and rootwork in the American South, to opeah, Santeria, and Vodou in the Caribbean, African-based religions in the Americas have long been places where women can ascend to the highest levels of leadership, and draw from the example of powerful female spirits. Thus, these religions offer a unique perspective on Black feminism in America and the Caribbean. Through literature, music, and film, this class will ask students to learn the history of these various traditions of Black girl magic, and to meditate on the future of Black feminist religious practices in today's America. By pairing with a Miami-area community organization that centers on Black women's empowerment, students will engage directly with the dynamic practices of African Diasporic spirituality throughout the course.

ENG 348. Modern African Literature and Film. 3 Credit Hours.
This class will give students an introduction to the amazing range of African literature and film from the era of independence from colonialism in the late 1950s, through the postcolonial Cold War era, into the post-apartheid, post-Arab Spring present. African writers and film-makers have been unusually politically engaged, but they are also often aesthetically experimental, and their works tell stories that often challenge preconceived notions about the continent. We will look at some of the most historically important writers and film-makers, and examine a few of the big debates in African literary studies, such as the question of why and how writers use the languages of the former colonizers; but the class will also emphasize questions of gender and sexuality in African cultural production, and highlight the vibrant work of female and queer writers and film-makers.
