

BS GLOBAL HEALTH STUDIES/MA IN GLOBAL HEALTH & SOCIETY

Overview

The College of Arts & Sciences offers a five-year interdisciplinary program offering students an opportunity to earn both bachelors and masters degree.

The BS in Global Health Studies/MA in Global Health & Society may be completed by students in the Pre-Med track of the Global Health Studies major.

Students who elect to complete the MA in Global Health & Society in one-year are required to complete 31 credits of graduate study. This unique graduate degree option provides additional preparation in the social sciences and humanities, as well as courses in epidemiology to strengthen a medical school or doctoral program application.

This five-year program provides a comprehensive framework covering the sociopolitical, economic, and geographic factors that, in addition to biomedical factors, impact health conditions of various countries and populations throughout the world. Students gain the social science knowledge and methodologies to integrate stakeholders and researchers in the design, implementation, interpretation of community-based participatory studies. Additionally, graduates of our program acquire skills in leadership and advocacy, and combined with a deep understanding of policy and governance, are prepared to assist private, government, non-profit, and for-profit organizations formulate new global and community health strategies.
