Introduction

History is the systematic study of the past. The study of history includes training in how to gather information, how to research issues and problems, how to analyze data and construct arguments, and how to communicate ideas in writing. These are essential skills, tools that are prized in the world beyond the university. A major in history is an excellent beginning and solid stepping stone to professional school and the business world. For goals ranging from law to journalism, and from medicine to the MBA, history serves as a versatile undergraduate major. Multinational businesses demand that their executives understand the peoples and cultures around them, and be able to communicate that understanding effectively. If an occupation demands critical thinking and analysis, a background in history is invaluable.

Educational Objectives

All history courses expose students to historical interpretation and critical analysis.

• Courses at the 100 and 200 levels are intended as introductions to broad fields of history and are open to students with no previous college-level history experience.
• All 300 level history courses are writing intensive, are graded principally through essay examinations and short papers, and count toward the fulfillment of the University of Miami writing across the curriculum requirement.
• Courses at the 500 level require a 300 level history course as prerequisite. All 500 level courses deal extensively with the historiography of their particular subjects, and all require a written research project as a major component of the work of the course.
• Since all History courses at the 300-level and higher are officially designated as "Writing" courses, History majors will automatically fulfill the College of Arts & Sciences's Advanced Writing and Communication requirement by completing the major.

Degree Programs

The major in History leads to the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Departmental Honors

Writing an Honors Thesis provides History majors with an extraordinary opportunity to work closely with a professor and to develop their skills as a researcher, writer, and communicator. The thesis is a demanding process that only junior or senior History majors with a high History GPA should consider pursuing. Students interested in writing a History Honors Thesis should first take a 500-level seminar on a topic in the field of study that they hope to pursue in their thesis. The student should discuss the possibility of writing an honors thesis with the seminar’s instructor and, if that professor agrees to serve as their thesis advisor, the student will then enroll in HIS 597 (Honors Thesis) the following semester as an independent study under that professor’s supervision. Upon successful completion of the thesis in HIS 597, the student will earn departmental honors at graduation. Please note that students writing an Honors Thesis must complete a total of two 500-level seminars (in addition to HIS 597) in order to fulfill the requirements for the History major.

HIS 229. Consumer Society: A Global History. 3 Credit Hours.
In the United States we are surrounded today with a seemingly limitless variety of consumer goods, and we are offered constant reminders of the increasingly globalized nature of modern life. Too often, however, such commentary reflects a shocking lack of perspective about the origins and evolution of these trends. This course encourages a deeper understanding by exploring the history of how consumer societies emerged across the world. Spanning an arc from the eighteenth century to the present, the course looks at the social and cultural impact of global consumables (ranging from food to automobiles) in the Americas, Europe, Asia, and other regions. The readings and lectures consider the social, ethical, and environmental problems associated with the rise of global consumption.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.

HIS 267. Making History. 3 Credit Hours.
Focus is on a series of topics that allow students to deepen their understanding of the worlds we have often lost or about which we know little by approaching them in innovative historical ways. Topics will include Material Culture in Early America, Oral History and the Making of the Modern World, Caribbean Rituals, Law and Society in the Americas, as well as Early Modern Religious Cultures, among others. Recommended for potential History majors and minors, as students will benefit from limited class sizes, receive one-on-one attention from professors, and much emphasis is placed on learning researching and writing skills.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall & Spring.
HIS 269. Global Queer History from Sappho to Lil Nas X. 3 Credit Hours.
This course offers a global overview of the history of homosexuality and lesbianism. The focus is on the premodern period. It also covers the modern period in what is sometimes called the global south—in this case, modern Latin America, Africa, and the Middle-East. This course complements a different course, HIS384: Modern LGBTQ+ History, which examines the modern period (c. 1850-2020) and emphasizes the United States. By way of comparison and complement, this course is global in scale and does not offer much discussion of the United States. This class offers students an overview of the dizzying array of social interpretations of a biological constant—same-sex sexuality. I call the course queer history because the term offers a broad conceptualization of same-sex interaction that does not depend on the gay/straight dichotomy (which is now outdated) and which never made sense before the 20th century in the West in any case. The words homosexuality and lesbian are not even a constant since they were Northwest European inventions dating from the 1860s. Queer does not, per se, refer to a specific, fixed identity but to the broad array of sexual behaviors and identities beyond heterosexuality. This course offers coverage of ancient Greece, Rome, Africa, and China; medieval and Renaissance Italy; early modern Spain and Portugal and their overseas empires in Latin America and Asia; pre-contact native Americans; colonial and modern Latin America; the Islamic world and Iran, Egypt, north Africa, and the Middle East; modern-day Latino and Hispanic Americans.

HIS 272. Hawai'i and the Pacific World: Or, How Surfing Colonized California and the World. 3 Credit Hours.
On the surface this is a class about surfing. But to understand surfing is to study the history of Hawai'i. This course examines the history of Hawai'i and of the sport which Hawaiians developed and created, surfing. This course traces the early history of ancient Hawai'i, when navigating migrants traveled between Polynesia and Hawai'i until they ceased contact. Traditional Hawai'i was governed by complex social and ritual systems, bound by the concept of kapu, or taboo. The class analyzes the process by which Hawai'i went from being a united kingdom to missionary outpost and target of pineapple plantations; to a U.S. territory which specifically disenfranchised native Hawai'ians; to the near suppression of surfing. The resulting Hawaiian Renaissance reshaped images of Hawai'i and surfing and surfing found willing converts in California. Other topics include the history of surfing styles and competition; comparative surf breaks and shore cultures; California dreamin', the feeling you get when you hear the Eagles; beach bums; professional surf competitions and O'ahu North Shore culture; spam and plate lunch; the broader Pacific world; castaways; fur traders; tuna and canning industry; fishermen.

HIS 301. Miami Engagement: History, Media, and Social Change. 3 Credit Hours.
This seminar-style course will examine the history, theory, and practice of civic engagement, community history, and social change in the United States. We will look at four overlapping areas of interest: the meanings of civic engagement in American history; the roles of history and memory in shaping place and community; the role of the media in structuring stories about history and community; and grass-roots activism and its role in reinvigorating and reshaping public spheres in America. We will pay particular attention to the factors that have promoted inclusion and engagement, as well as those that have led to disenfranchisement and alienation. We will look at efforts by local, national, and even global activists to connect to communities large and small. And we will ask how the issues of memory, place, community, civil society, and global citizenship form a matrix around which to understand and shape broad-based collaboration among students, faculty, community residents, and civic organizations.

HIS 319. Warfare in African History. 3 Credit Hours.
This course examines the historical role of warfare in shaping African economies, societies, politics, and cultures. The course is organized thematically without ignoring the significance of the chronological boundaries of events in the history of Africa. However, the course's chronological structure defies the traditional temporal boundaries established in the pre-colonial–colonial–post-colonial sequence. The discussions aim to start with the early nineteenth-century developments and navigate to the present to open up opportunities for a longue durée approach that will help students examine interconnectedness, continuities, and transformation in precolonial, colonial, and independent Africa. Key themes of scholarly debate about the role of warfare in the history of Africa, emphasizing developments since the beginning of the nineteenth century, will inform class discussions and the nature of assignments.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall, Spring, & Summer.

HIS 320. Africa & The Indian Ocean World. 3 Credit Hours.
Since ancient times and through the modern era, the East African littoral has had a vibrant exchange of commodities, peoples, ideas, diseases, technologies, etc., with the rest of the Indian Ocean world. This course examines selected themes in the history of Africa's interactions with the world of the Indian Ocean, which span several centuries. Its focus includes human-environment interactions, the roles of Islam, maritime commerce, European involvement in the region, and the creation of a distinct Swahili culture that connected societies and economies in the East African interior to the Indian Ocean world. It relies on weekly reading, multiple activities, and writing requirements, appreciating methodological challenges that confronted historians to understand the region's dynamic and most complex historical processes. The course, therefore, starts with readings and discussions about the idea of Africa, issues in its historiography, and key historical concepts related to the Indian Ocean Africa. While Africa remains the course's principal focus, the nature of the lectures and activities invite discussions from global perspectives.
Components: LEC.
Grading: GRD.
Typically Offered: Fall, Spring, & Summer.

HIS 321. Human Trafficking in African History. 3 Credit Hours.
This course examines several key themes in the history of human trafficking in Africa. It starts with global slave trade traffic: the trans-Saharan, the Indian Ocean, and the Atlantic slave trade networks. The focus then turns to how African human trafficking of global significance emerged in the wake of declining slave trade networks, exploring various forms of trafficking built on and embedded in multiple forms of slavery or subtle and blurry transitions to freedom. Readings and discussions about trafficking in the 19th century, the transition from the slave trade to migrant labor, the links between the end of slavery and the trafficking in colonial Africa, sex trafficking and prostitution, Islam and trafficking, contemporary trafficking, and series of international legal instruments created to fight against human trafficking constitute vital blocks of the course. In exploring these themes, students will examine the dynamic and complex transitions between slavery and the rise of multiple forms of human trafficking that have become a global economic factor, defying national, oceanic, and continental boundaries. Students will have opportunities to appreciate the historical roles of human trafficking in transforming local and international relations and its significance in understanding societies, cultures, polities, religions, and people's perceptions and worldviews. While Africa remains the course's focus, most themes open up discussions about the history of human trafficking from global perspectives.

This course offers an overview of modern LGBTQ+ history. It complements a different course, HIS269: Homoeroticism: A Global History of Queer Men, offered in different semesters and which examines non-Western and non-U.S. history in the pre-modern era. This course, as a complement, examines the history of LGBTQ+ peoples in the 19th and 20th centuries, primarily in the United States. The course begins in Western Europe in the 19th century with the so-called invention of homosexuality as a specific category. The term homosexuality was created in the 1860s by German theorists of sex and elaborated by one of the first gay-rights activists, Karl Ulrichs. This course begins with 19th and early 20th century cultural, political, and social histories of queer London, Berlin, Paris, and St. Petersburg as this new category of analysis came into vogue. The rest of the course focuses on queer history in the United States, with an emphasis on the 20th century. The class examines a variety of topics and narrative histories. These may include (but not exclusive to): indigenous peoples and the berdache/third spirit; Gay New York before WWII; early Lesbian hangouts; the Harlem Renaissance; African-American house parties and queer spaces; black and lesbian intersectionality or lack thereof; immigration and “old world” sex- role homosexuality; homosexual and homosocial behavior in rural America; divas like Mae West, Elizabeth Taylor, Bette Davis, and Lady Gaga; gay icons like Cary Grant, Tennessee Williams, and Luke Evans; the WWII effect; the Lavender Scare of the 1950s; gay and lesbian rights movements; Mattachine; Frank Kameny; Daughters of Bilitis; feminism; Audre Lorde; San Francisco, the Beats, and the Love Generation; Marsha Johnson, Sylvia Rivera, Stormé DeLarverie and POC and trans activists; Stonewall; the Damron Guide, Main Street, U.S.A.; Kinsey and the Kinsey Report; Chicago, Detroit, and the Midwest; the U.S. South and “Men like that;” the 1970s; sexual cultures of the pre-AIDS era; disco and clubs; NYC’s Lower Manhattan and counterculture; John Waters, Marlon Riggs, and underground cinema; Castro Street; racial politics; Hispanics and Hispanic cultures; borderlands and Mexican influence on queer culture of the Southwest/West; Ballroom Houses and voguing; trans peoples and rights; drag queens and kings; bathhouses; HIV and the impact of the AIDS epidemic; Actup! and Queer Nation; LGBTQ rights and political strategies; political intersectionality; Constitutional Law and LGBTQ issues/rights; Protease Inhibitors and HIV treatment; One, The Ladder, Bay Area Reporter, Habari-Daftari, and LGBTQ community publications; Atlanta’s “forgotten” gay rights movement; Latinos and gay culture; fashion; more...
