POLITICAL SCIENCE

politicalscience.as.miami.edu

Dept. Code: POL

Introduction
A political science major prepares students for work in a number of fields including law, politics, public policy, public administration, and international affairs, as well as employment in business and the non-profit sector.

Educational Objectives
Political science majors gain an understanding of American political and legal life, the workings of other countries’ political and economic systems, the relations among countries in the international arena, and key concepts in both political philosophy and social science methodology.

Advanced Writing & Communication Requirements
Details of the Advanced Writing and Communication Proficiency:

Degree candidates must complete at least four writing courses, and at least one writing course must be in one of the student's major disciplines (not applicable to BLA students who do not select a major). Students should consult the bulletin section of their major to find out which writing-intensive courses are acceptable to the discipline.

Individual writing course offerings may make the writing component independent of the rest of the course. As such the writing component might be optional, the writing component might not contribute to the overall grade, and writing credit might be awarded even if the overall grade is a fail.

Transfer students may use a maximum of two courses towards the writing requirement.

Degree Programs
- Bachelor of Arts in Political Science
- Five year program: Bachelor of Arts in Political Science and Masters of Public Administration (A special curriculum for students specializing in public administration enables them to complete the requirements for both a Bachelor's and Master's degree in five years.)

Departmental Honors
To earn Departmental Honors a political science major must:

1. Graduate with an overall GPA of 3.500.
2. Graduate with a political science GPA of at least 3.700. All political science course grades on a student's transcript are counted in the calculation of the major GPA. This includes all grades from courses that were completed more than once (e.g. to obtain a high enough grade to count towards the major).

POL 504. Biology and Politics. 3 Credit Hours.
Political scientists traditionally study political decision-making as a product of individual level characteristics. For example, a person's partisan identification is highly predictive of their vote choice. Political scientists have also begun to assess the influence of social forces on our politics. For example, it has been shown that everyday discussions about politics with friends, neighbors, and coworkers influence political attitudes and behaviors. More recently, political scientists have begun to examine the influence that our biology has on our politics. This seminar is a survey of this growing area of research.

POL 532. Art and Politics in Paris. 3 Credit Hours.
Analysis of the relationship between narratives, aesthetics (beauty) and the political/social world. By successfully completing this course, students will; understand how humans interpret the political, social, and physical world through narrative. Come to see how most/all political controversies involve competing narratives. How false narratives are deployed to manipulate the public. Realize that through art important analytical arguments are made, which impart substantial insight into social, political, and physical phenomena. See how philosophy is intelligently conveyed through art - including approaches to political legitimacy, justice, and how important analytical arguments are made. To analyze the relationship between art and politics, we draw on renaissance, modern, contemporary, and indigenous art. Paris is arguably the center of the art world, with a number of museums holding a surfeit of socially and politically important works. We visit a number of these museums. After visits to these museums, time in class will be dedicated to discuss those works you, the students, find significant. A requirement for this class is a camera (a camera phone is acceptable), with which you photograph those works you’d like to discuss in class.

POL 538. Education Politics and Policy. 3 Credit Hours.
Explores education politics and policy in the United States. We begin with an examination of justice-oriented pedagogies (e.g., Freire’s Pedagogy of the Oppressed, bell hook’s Teaching to Transgress) to establish the norms for the course. Next, we explore how civic learning in schools helps sustain the vitality of democracy. Concurrently, we discuss how policymakers have tried to limit access to educational experiences for women, LGBTQ individuals, and people of color throughout American history. This framing in mind, we spend multiple weeks exploring prominent policy issues in the realm of education policy (e.g., school choice, online learning, polarized school board elections). Throughout the semester, students will be asked to observe school board meetings throughout the greater Miami area. Using content analyses, we will examine (1) whose voices are being heard, (2) which issues are being discussed, and (3) whether the issues being discussed are representative of the concerns of parents, students, and teachers. We will use this research and the insights of local community stakeholders to think through ways to create education policies that are responsive to needs of Miami area residents and contribute to more equitable educational outcomes. While the course focuses on policy challenges faced by local governments and city residents, it is also meant to be an empowering civic learning experience.
